

World Health Organisation- E-health

E-health involves a broad group of activities that use electronic means to deliver health-related information, resources and services: it is the use of information and communication technologies (ICT) for health.

It is an important initiative from the World Health Organisation, since this action gives the possibility for the EU Member States to use this as a mean for reforming health systems and for ensuring equitable and affordable access to health care. In addition, this will provide an opportunity for citizens to obtain accurate and on time information regarding many aspects of their health system, eliminating in that way the possibilities of exposing themselves to false information and/ or disinformation.

More about E-health can be found here: <http://www.euro.who.int/en/health-topics/Health-systems/e-health/e-health-readmore>